DESCRIPTION

Currently there are more than 125 Chinese cities with a population exceeding one million. The unprecedented urban growth in China presents a crucial development for studies on globalization and urban transformation. This concise and engaging book examines the past trajectories, present conditions, and future prospects of Chinese urbanization, by investigating five key themes - governance, migration, landscape, inequality, and cultural economy.

Based on a comprehensive evaluation of the literature and original research materials, Ren offers a critical account of the Chinese urban condition after the first decade of the twenty-first century. She argues that the urban-rural dichotomy that was artificially constructed under socialism is no longer a meaningful lens for analyses and that Chinese cities have become strategic sites for reassembling citizenship rights for both urban residents and rural migrants.

The book is essential reading for students and scholars of urban and development studies with a focus on China, and all interested in understanding the relationship between state, capitalism, and urbanization in the global context.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Xuefei Ren is assistant professor of sociology and global urban studies at Michigan State University and a fellow at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars.
FEATURES

• With 125 cities of over one million inhabitants, China’s urban growth is a crucial case study for understanding urbanization today

• Examines urbanization in China through 5 key themes: governance, migration, landscape, inequality, and cultural economy

• Investigates the causes and consequences of China’s rapid urban transformation, at both a national and global level

• Part of Polity’s new ‘China Today’ series, a landmark series examining key social, political, economic and cultural issues of China’s place in today’s world

SERIES

China Today

For additional product details, please visit https://www.wiley.com/en-us