Gender, Race, Class and Health: Intersectional Approaches
Amy J. Schulz (Editor), Leith Mullings (Editor)

DESCRIPTION

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Amy J. Schulz, Ph.D., M.P.H., is a research associate professor with joint appointments in the Department of Health Behavior and Health Education and the Institute for Research on Women and Gender, and associate director of the Center for Research on Ethnicity, Culture, and Health at the University of Michigan.

Leith Mullings, Ph.D., is Presidential Professor of Anthropology at the Graduate Center of the City University of New York, and recipient of the Prize for Distinguished Achievement in the Critical Study of North America (1997) from the Society for the Anthropology of North America.

FEATURES

- Editors' reputation: Schultz, an up and coming academic star, is already among the best known social scientists working in a public health setting, at the internationally acclaimed School of Public Health at University of Michigan. Mullings has a distinguished appointment with one of the top U.S. anthropology programs.
• Breaking Ground: The book employs the concept of “intersectionality”, which enhances the analysis of thorny social issues. The “intersectionality” approach is moving at top speed from the social sciences into public health. Ideal for the student or uninitiated practitioner, the book includes chapters with the needed background on key theories of health disparities so that no one gets left behind.

• Major-name contributors: Among them: H. Jack Geiger, Community Medicine and Director of the Program in Health, Medicine, and Society, Sophie Davis School of Medicine City College of New York, Mary Northridge, School of Public Health, Columbia University, and editor, American Journal of Public Health (published by APHA), and Ruth Zambrana, Professor, Women’s Studies, University of Maryland, College Park (coeditor of Health Issues in the Latino Community, Jossey-Bass)

---

SERIES

Public Health/Vulnerable Populations

For additional product details, please visit https://www.wiley.com/en-us