This book is an authoritative account of Poland's emerging foreign and security policies and will contribute to an understanding of the foreign policy preferences of an enlarged EU.

- Evaluation of Poland as by far the largest and most vocal of all the countries joining the EU
- Exploration of Poland's strong support for US policy over Iraq, its military potential, its proven capacity to use armed force and its de facto role as a regional leader
- Argues that Poland will have a defining influence not only on the nature of transatlantic relations, but also on the EU's emerging international identity

Dr Kerry Longhurst is Senior Lecturer in European Security at the European Research Institute at the University of Birmingham, UK. She has published in the areas of German security policy, Polish foreign policy and transatlantic security.
Dr Marcin Zaborowski is a Lecturer in European Politics at Aston University in the UK and is currently seconded as a Senior Research Fellow at the European Union Institute for Security Studies in Paris. He has published widely in the areas of European and transatlantic security, and the Common Foreign and Security Policy.

FEATURES

• Evaluation of Poland as by far the largest and most vocal of all the countries joining the EU

• An authoritative account of Poland's emerging foreign and security policies and its confidence and assertiveness over the European constitution

• Exploration of Poland's strong support for US policy over Iraq, its military potential, its proven capacity to use armed force and its de facto role as a regional leader

• Argues that Poland will have a defining influence not only on the nature of transatlantic relations, but also on the EU's emerging international identity

SERIES

Chatham House Papers

For additional product details, please visit https://www.wiley.com/en-us