DESCRIPTION

As capitalism develops and state socialism disintegrates, divisions of labor are being reorganized, with major implications for the distribution of power in society. Yet the concept of division of labor has been one of the most neglected in contemporary political economy and social theory. Compared to class, gender or markets, it has typically been treated as a rather indifferent concept, part of the backdrop rather than one of the key forces of the economy and society.

Dealing with the reworking of the division of labor in both practice and theory, and transcending the narrow boundaries of academic disciplines, the authors provide a new perspective on some of the most hotly debated issues in social science.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Andrew Sayer is Lecturer in Human Geography in the School of Social Sciences, University of Sussex.

Richard Walker is Professor of Geography, University of California, Berkeley.

FEATURES

• Iconoclastic, clearly-argued critique of concepts of gender and class
• Critique of theories of a post-industrial economy

• Wide-ranging review of industrial organization in theory and practice

• A new approach to economic power and performance in capitalism and socialism.

To purchase this product, please visit https://www.wiley.com/en-us/9781557862808